First four winners in Team SCA photo competition

2014-08-12 14:00

SCA have launched a photo competition – Team SCA Academy – in partnership with one of the world’s leading distributors of images, Getty Images to empower female photographers. The first four of the total of ten winners has just been announced and will get the chance to cover a stopover during Volvo Ocean Race 2014-15.

The Team SCA Academy photo competition is a way for SCA and Getty Images to empower female photographers.

"Ordinary Women doing an Extraordinary Thing", was the overall theme that the photographers were given when entering the competition. With the setting of SCA and our participation in the Volvo Ocean Race, the female photographers were encouraged to present a portfolio of images celebrating inspiring women from all walks of life.

The first part of the competition received more than 200 entries from 15 countries. Each of the winners will be assigned to one of the stopovers of the race. The assignment will be to cover an aspect of the project specifically targeted around local CSR initiatives, linked to Women and Hygiene.

"I am very pleased with the diversity of the entries. The first four of ten photographers who will represent SCA with Team SCA throughout the Volvo Ocean Race are really worthy winners," comments Josephine Edwall-Björklund, Senior Vice President Group Function Communications, SCA.

The first four winners of Team SCA Academy are: Alecsandra Raluca Dragoi (Romania), Jessica Pepper-Peterson (Italy), Ana Lima (Brazil) and Raquel Clausi (Spain).

Ana Lima from Brazil entered an image of a seamstress in the Andes selling some of handmade clothes made with llama wool in a small tent 20,000 feet above sea level on the Peruvian side of the Andes mountains.
